Introduction

The Handbook of the Birds of the World (HBW) and BirdLife International digital checklist reflects the taxonomy published in the two volumes of the HBW and BirdLife International Illustrated Checklist of the Birds of the World (non-passerines: del Hoyo and Collar 2014; passerines: del Hoyo and Collar 2016) and subsequent updates resulting from the ongoing work of the HBW/BirdLife International Taxonomic Working Group. BirdLife uses this digital checklist as the basis for much of its global, regional and national conservation work. It also sets the taxonomic basis of BirdLife's assessment of all birds for the IUCN Red List, which is widely used by conservationists, scientists, governments, policy instruments and the private sector across the world, and also underpins the identification of Key Biodiversity Areas (KBAs).

This pdf version of the checklist includes the scientific and common names used, the authority (for the original description of the taxon), the latest global IUCN Red List category (e.g. Extinct, Vulnerable, Least Concern, etc.), taxonomic notes where relevant, and a record ID number unique to the taxonomic entity used in the IUCN Species Information Service (SIS). Previously recognised taxa are also included and distinguished as 'Not Recognised' (NR).

Future updates and taxonomic revisions

Knowledge of bird taxonomy is constantly improving and therefore the digital checklist is a work in progress, with updates released annually. The HBW/BirdLife International Taxonomic Working Group makes decisions on modifications to the checklist, making extensive use of systematic criteria by which species rank can be consistently assessed where this is necessary (e.g. for newly described species or proposed splits). These criteria (Tobias et al. 2010) involve weighting morphological and acoustic differences as compared with the nearest believed relatives, and are particularly intended to help make decisions involving allopatric taxa (as opposed to those in sympatric, parapatric or hybrid zone situations, where the situation is generally clearer). Molecular evidence is also considered, despite the challenges with scoring genetic differences between species. Further details on the basis of the checklist, the application of these criteria and the incorporation of molecular data are given in the introductions to the two published volumes (del Hoyo and Collar 2014, 2016).

There were probably two other native pigeons on the island - a slaty, blue-winged Allectroenas , and unidentified ramiers. All three apparently became extinct in the early 1700s (Cheke 1987). Adler (1994) confused the situation by applying the name duboisi to the (undescribed) Allectroenas . CAPRIMULGIFORMES	Trochilidae	Hummingbirds	Bahama Hummingbird	Nesophlox evelynae	(Bourcier, 1847)	R	LC	Philodice evelynae	Bahama Woodstar	Calliphlox evelynae (del Hoyo and Collar 2014) has been moved to the genus Nesophlox Ridgway, 1910, on the basis that Abrahamczyk et al. (2015) demonstrated that the species is sister to Mellisuga Brisson, 1760 and Feo et al. (2015) showed that it falls within a clade that also includes Mellisuga and Archilochus Reichenbach, 1854. Subsequently, N. evelynae (=C. evelynae [del Hoyo and Collar 2014]) has been split into N. evelynae and N. lyrura (which see) (Handbook of the Birds of the World and BirdLife International 2018	Feo, T.J., Musser, J.M., Berv, J. & Clark, C.J. 2015. Divergence in morphology, calls, song, mechanical sounds, and genetics supports species status for the Inaguan hummingbird (Trochilidae: Calliphlox "evelynae" lyrura). CAPRIMULGIFORMES	Trochilidae	Hummingbirds	Lyre-tailed Hummingbird	Nesophlox lyrura	(Gould, 1869)	R	LC		Inaguan Lyretail, Inagua Woodstar	be split from N. evelynae by Feo et al. (2015), on the basis of different tail morphology, display and voice. Since the tail morphology is associated with the display, only one of these phenomena should be scored for level of difference using the Tobias criteria. Based on data in Table 1 in Feo et al. (2015: 253), we find that lyrura differs from evelynae in its shorter R1 (12.8 ± 1.0 vs 15.6 ± 0.9), hence effect size -2.9 (score 2); longer R5 (38.0 ± 1.1 vs 31.8 ± 1.1), hence effect size 5.64 (score 3); fully iridescent vs almost entire non-iridescent forecrown in males (at least 2); much lower fundamental frequency of scolding chip calls ($1.5-3$ kHz vs $7-9$ kHz) (3); much quieter (audible <5 m vs <30 m), shorter (<5 s vs $3-27$ s) and simpler song (3). On this basis lyrura emerges as a highly distinct species and meets the criteria for inclusion in the Handbook of the Birds of the World and BirdLife International digital checklist of the birds of the world V.3 (HBW and BirdLife International 2018). Prior to the split, Calliphlox evelynae was	Feo, T.J., Musser, J.M., Berv, J. & Clark, C.J. 2015. Wallace et al. (2017) provides molecular support for the acceptance of the population of Band-rumped Storm-petrel Hydrobates castro jabejabe on the Cape Verdes as a full species, as indicated by at least two previous studies (cited in del Hoyo and Collar [2014]: 372). A study by Bolton (2007) revealed that the Cape Verde birds differ rather strongly in voice: 'The hot-season Azores calls generally have a simple one- or two-syllable, rising breath note, stressed on the last syllable, that contrasts markedly with the more protracted, four-syllable (rarely five-syllable) breath note of the sympatric cool-season population, stressed on the penultimate syllable. Cape Verde Burrow Calls are typified by extremely infrequent interruptions of the purr phrase, which on occasion may continue for several minutes without a breath note.'	del Hoyo, J., Collar, N.J., Christie, D.A., Elliott, A. and Fishpool, L.D.C. 2014. PROCELLARIIFORMES	Hydrobatidae	Northern storm-petrels	Ainley's Storm-petrel	Hydrobates cheimomnestes	(Ainley, 1980)	R	VU			split into H. leucorhous , H. socorroensis and H. cheimomnestes (Handbook of the Birds of the World and BirdLife International 2018). The taxa can be separated only tentatively and on combinations of characters and items of evidence. Using such combinations, Howell (2012) treated both taxa as potentially separate species from Leach's, using '[L]' in the scientific name, apparently to indicate the uncertainty involved in that decision. The accounts of the morphological differences between the taxa repeatedly refer to means and inclinations ('typically', 'averages', 'generally', 'usually', 'relatively', 'often', 'tends to'). Clearly the fact that cheimomnestes breeds at different times of year from socorroensis (and therefore also has a different moult schedule) strongly suggests that two species are involved, but this in itself cannot be the single decisive factor. Moreover, Howell's (2012) case for the split of socorroensis from leucorhous is hard to discern. In an online post Howell (2015) produced some	Handbook of the Birds of the World and BirdLife International. 2018. PROCELLARIIFORMES	Procellariidae	Petrels, shearwaters	Salvin's Prion	Pachyptila salvini	(Mathews, 1912)	R	LC			Pachyptila salvini and P. macgillivrayi were previously lumped as P. salvini following del Hoyo and Collar (2014). Ryan et al. (2014) provided convincing evidence, based on differences in bill morphology and in breeding season, that two species of prion breed sympatrically on Gough Island. It is not certain whether the narrow-billed form is macgillivrayi (as subsequently claimed by Dilley et al. 2015), which is otherwise only known breeding on Amsterdam (where now extinct) and St. Paul (where now confined to one rat-free islet) in the Indian Ocean. Until genetic studies or comparisons of skins have been made, we accept provisionally that the Gough birds are most likely to be macgillivrayi and, equally provisionally, that this taxon merits specific status.	del Hoyo, J., Collar, N.J., Christie, D.A., Elliott, A. and Fishpool, L.D.C. 2014. PROCELLARIIFORMES	Procellariidae	Petrels, shearwaters	Rapa Shearwater	Puffinus myrtae	(Bourne, 1959)	R	CR			Collar 2014) has been split into P. newelli and P. myrtae (Handbook of the Birds of the World and BirdLife International 2018). Martínez-Gómez et al. (2015) found that P. (n). myrtae, 'Rapa Shearwater', is genetically more distinct from newelli than newelli is from auricularis. On this basis they propose that myrtae be treated as a full species. Such an arrangement is supported by Shirihai et al. (2017), who noted: 'Rapa Shearwater is much smaller (in all biometric characters) than the other two taxa..., and is furthermore highly distinctive in having a unique combination of white undertail-coverts (vs. dark in both newelli and auricularis) and whitish inner webs to the remiges, as well as a white face.' Following revised scoring of parsed characters for the differentiation of P. auricularis, P. newelli and P. myrtae, the latter emerges as a very strong candidate for species rank, given that the effect size for wing length vs the smaller of the other two taxa (auricularis), based on Table 3 in Shirihai et al. (2017), is -6.56 (score 3); white vs dark	Handbook of the Birds of the World and BirdLife International. 2018. PROCELLARIIFORMES	Procellariidae	Petrels, shearwaters	Newell's Shearwater	Puffinus newelli	Henshaw, 1900	R	CR			Collar 2014) has been split into P. newelli and P. myrtae (which see) (Handbook of the Birds of the World and BirdLife International 2018). Martínez-Gómez et al. (2015) found molecular evidence that Newell's Shearwater Puffinus newelli and Townsend's Shearwater P. auricularis are conspecific. Although they mention the morphological analysis in del Hoyo and Collar (2014: p386) which gave a Tobias score of 7 to newelli, these authors did not consider the characters in question: larger size (an effect size of 3.29 on tail length yielded a score of 2; new data in Shirihai et al. [2017] yields an effect size of 2.41, thus again a score of 2); cleaner-cut head pattern (score 1); bolder, squarer neck mark (score 2); all-white undertail-coverts (score 2); plus darker upperparts (scored 1 but uncounted).(These characters and scores are revised below.) Martínez-Gómez et al. (2015) also mentioned that 'Howell (2012) proposed a separate treatment based on their differences in morphology, breeding chronology	Handbook of the Birds of the World and BirdLife International. 2018. CHARADRIIFORMES	Laridae	Gulls, terns, skimmers	Iceland Gull	Larus glaucoides	Meyer, 1822	R	LC			Larus glaucoides and L. thayeri (del Hoyo and Collar 2014) have been lumped as L. glaucoides (Handbook of the Birds of the World and BirdLife International 2018). Chesser et al. (2017) made Thayer's Gull Larus thayeri a subspecies of Iceland Gull L. glaucoides, with the race L. g. kumlieni retained 'as a separate group' although the proposal (http://checklist.aou.org/assets/proposals/PDF/2017-C.pdf) on which the decision on thayeri was based argued that kumlieni is the product of non-assortative mating between the taxa thayeri and glaucoides; see also Ayyash (2017). The close relationship of thayeri and glaucoides is shown without commentary in Figure 8B in Sonsthagen et al. (2016). We accept Larus thayeri as a subspecies of L. glaucoides but treat kumlieni as an apparent hybrid population having no taxonomic status.	Cramp et al. (2013). S hadorami (Kirwan, Schweizer & Copete, 2015) was previously listed as S. butleri in del Hoyo and Collar (2014) and before. Recent genetic and morphological analyses have revealed that the type specimen of S. butleri - the geographical provenance of which is open to doubt - differs significantly from all other specimens previously ascribed to this species, indicating (despite the lack of vocal data definitively linked to the same population as the type) that two species are involved, principally because the degree of molecular differentiation is close to that in other taxa of Strix traditionally recognised as species, which led to populations of this species from S Oman to the Levant and E Egypt, which share the same morphology and vocalizations, being described as a separate species, Desert Tawny Owl S. hadorami.	del Hoyo, J., Collar, N.J., Christie, D.A., Elliott, A. and Fishpool, L.D.C. 2014.
