Accounting concepts and conventions pdf

Accounting concepts are the conditions and conditions on which an entity's financial statements are prepared. These are the concepts accounting concepts are the basis for the formulation of accounting principles. Accounting concepts have universal application. Here I intend to discuss some basic details about these concepts (1) Admission concept: The concept of admission assumes that the enterprise is separated from its owners. Accounting transactions should only be recorded with this concept. The main intention of this concept is to maintain commercial transactions keep away from the influence of personal transactions of its owners. (2) Periodic concept: As regards the concept of concern, it is assumed that an entity has an indefinite life. If we want to measure the financial performance of an entity, then we must divide the operations of the entity for a specific period, otherwise it is very difficult to ascertain the trend of the business. The periodic concept takes on a small but working fraction of time to measure business performance. It generally takes 1 year is taken for this purpose. (3) Money measurement concept: As for this concept transactions which can be measured in monetary terms must only be recorded in accounts books. Transactions that cannot be converted into currency terms should not be recorded in books. Fromis the measurement to show financial performance, does not accept transactions other than currency to register in the accounts books. (4) Examination concept: As for this concept transactions must be recognised in accounts books only when they occur and not on a cash basis. The main advantage of this concept is that the Financial Budget prepared according to this concept informs users not only about past events involving payment and receiving money, but also on the obligations to pay in cash in the future and the resources that represent the money to receive in the future. 5) Correspondence concept: As for this concept all expenditure which can be combined with the revenue of that period must be taken into account only for the financial income. This concept is based on the concept of Accrual as it gives importance to the occurrence of an expense that is spent to generate an income. This concept leads to changes to the end as exceptional expenses, income and prepaid expenses, income. 6) Approach the concept; As for this concept, the budgets are prepared on a assumption that the company will continue its operations for the foreseeable future. Thus, he says that the company has neither intention nor need to liquidate or reduce the scale of its operations. The assessment of the assets of a business entity depends on this assumption. 7) Cost concept says that any change in value of a good must be recorded only when the company raises it. This concept prefers the realization of the value for which we want to give effect in the books of accounts. (9) Dual Aspect concept prefers the realization of the value for which we want to give effect in the books of accounts. two main types: Each transaction should have a debt and credit. Debt is the transaction part that represents the increase of liabilities, equity and income, earnings, equity. Accounting contributions: Accounting agreements are generally accepted guidelines for the preparation of funding. They come from practical uses and applications. They are not legally documented policies. As a result of the accounting conventions (1) Conservation: As for this concept while Accounting should not be expected of income, but should include all possible losses. When there are many alternative values to take into account a good then we should choose the lower value. The inventory assessment is carried out only according to this concept, such as the cost or market value which is always lower. (2) Consistency: For this reason accounting policies followed in the preparation and presentation of budgets should be consistent from one period to another. Ain the Accounting policy can only be made when required by law, or for better presentation of accounts or change in accounting standards. 3) Material: As with this concept, items which have a significant economic effect on the business of the enterprise must be disclosed in the budget and any insignificant element that is not relevant to the users should not be disclosed in the budget.
